The CROPPI grants fund activities within the sub-Saharan African Region, where nearly two billion people rely on agriculture and smallholder crop production to meet their daily food needs. CROPPI invests in research to improve smallholder crop productivity and sustainability through integrated, multi-season cropping and farming system research. The report to NIFA covers the period from April 2010 through August 2013. Dr. Steve Hutchins, Executive Director of NCAR, and his colleagues began CROPPI in 2008 with the goal to improve food security in the region through the development and testing of new fertilizer, pest management and irrigation technologies. The CROPPI team initially worked with the Kenya Agricultural and Livestock Research Organization (KALRO) to increase cereal production in the smallholder context in the following three areas: Practices for ensuring the long-term growth and sustainability of maize through improvements in the health and productivity of smallholder maize crop roots in the early to mid-season after planting; Improving efficiency of fertilizer use and availability of fertilizer-effective seed to ensure sustainable production of high-quality forage for ruminant livestock production in areas
