The shortage of nurses is a national health care issue. In response, nurses are moving into expanded roles, often making the transition from registered nurse (RN) to advanced practice nurse (APN) as a way to reduce costs while maintaining quality patient care. This article reviews the transition of RNs to APNs and the learning needs of APNs when they transition. Sixteen articles were reviewed to answer the research questions, "What are the transition resources needed for APNs?" and "What are the learning needs for APNs when transitioning?" Critical review was used to synthesize the findings. An APN has successfully transitioned to expanded roles, and most individuals are successful. APNs need to develop core competencies and augment existing ones as they transition to expanded roles. Research is needed to identify ways to improve the transition of RNs into APNs.The present invention relates to the field of surgical instruments. In particular, the present invention relates to a surgical stapler for clamping, ligating, and stapling tissue. Surgical staplers, as taught by U.S. Pat. No. 5,465,895 to Knodel and U.S. Pat. No. 5,452,832 to Lin et al., are commonly used for applying a plurality of fasteners, or staples, to body tissue to secure adjacent tissue or organs to maintain their relative positions for healing or for performing other medical procedures. During stapling procedures, surgical staplers are often used to ligate or clamp tissue to be fastened. Many surgical staplers are operable to sequentially fire a plurality of staples in a fastener firing operation. The instruments may be operable to simultaneously fire a plurality of fasteners during a multi-fire operation. An apparatus and method of operating a surgical stapler for sequential and multi-fire operations are taught by U.S. Pat. No. 5,978,762 to Campbell et al. The apparatus and method are similar to those of the instant invention and are disclosed herein in detail. Prior surgical stapling instruments have typically been configured to operate in a clamping and firing mode to apply fasteners to tissue, and in a firing and separation mode to eject the
