A great deal of molecular data is now available for the study of in vivo virus-host cell interactions. In recent years, the use of somatic cell fusion has permitted the construction of chimeric viruses that can be used to obtain recombinant viral variants. These recombinants can be used to study the precise intracellular location of viral structural proteins, their intracellular trafficking, or the specific role of a particular protein or protein domains in intracellular virus-cell interactions. In this chapter, we describe the methodologies used to generate chimeric viruses and describe their use in the study of viral entry, replication, assembly and budding.. %> require 'json' require 'rails_helper' RSpec.describe "Alerts" do include_context "in the quiz share" before do @share = quiz_share_model @course = @share.quiz.context.quizzes.create!(:context => @share, :name => "quiz") @student = @share.context.users.create!(:username => 'user1', :email => 'user1@example.com') @ 2d92ce491b
