To trigger my animations, I'm using $('.awesome-container').waypoint('init');. So far so good. However, in my case, the new element I want to animate, is added to the DOM before jQuery is ready, so waypoints isn't detecting it. There are several solutions to this problem, but my problem is that I have a bunch of other functions which are being called before the DOM is ready, so they're also being called before jQuery is ready. Now, it's no problem for those functions to return early if jQuery isn't ready yet, but they don't want to, they should wait for jQuery to be ready. The problem is, I really don't want to change the way those functions work. It might be simpler and cleaner to just delay the call to waypoints, but I can't seem to find a way to do it with jQuery. Related A: I'm assuming you've tried the following things already: Downloaded the zip file containing the latest version of your app (that is, both the "new version" and the previously downloaded zip file) and replaced the old version? Run the application, it should prompt you to update the app. Cleared your app data and cache Deleted the APK file Checked if it has a "unknown sources" option in your security settings. If these steps fail, the most likely reason would be that you have a version of the app that is not signed by the author. I'm assuming that would mean the update is simply refusing to work since it's not from the same author (which is weird). You can read more about publishing the app on google play here. Edit: I just tested this myself and found that when you search for the app with a PC it keeps a copy of the old version and doesn't let you update it. I don't know if that's what happened to you, but if you've tried the steps above (at least step 2), you could have missed it. Dental hygienists and patients' perceptions of their relationship.
