Even the Philippine Department of Health, while not questioning the seriousness of the situation, is not convinced that it's something to be worried about. I reached out to the Department of Health to ask whether it was at all concerned about what was happening in the Philippines, but it doesn't seem to be worrying too much about the outbreak in general. I then asked if there is a chance the outbreak could be more worrisome than the recent swine flu outbreak in the U.S., and if the Department of Health could distinguish the two for the public at large.
