Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method for producing a magneto-optical recording medium, and to a magneto-optical recording medium. 2. Related Background Art Recently, a magneto-optical recording medium capable of rewriting information by irradiating a laser beam thereto has been proposed and put into practical use. The medium has a recording layer containing a ferromagnetic material, a transparent dielectric layer, and a protective layer, or a layer structure similar to that of a magneto-optical recording medium. In the case of using a magneto-optical recording medium for recording and reproduction of a great number of digital signals of, for example, about 100,000 bits or more, it is necessary to form a magneto-optical recording domain of a size of at least about 1.mu.m in an optical spot of an optical system of a light source used for recording and reproduction. The recording density of the conventional magneto-optical recording medium is about 100 times the size of the optical spot. On the other hand, in order to form the magneto-optical recording domain with a size of about 1.mu.m by the use of the conventional magneto-optical recording medium, it is necessary to make the optical spot diameter at least as small as about 1.mu.m. In the case where the recording layer is made of the above-mentioned specific magnetic material, the temperature of the recording layer near the center of the optical spot becomes extremely higher than that near the outside thereof, and the thermal expansion or contraction of the recording layer is moderated. Thus, the recording layer is prevented from being thermally expanded or shrunken, and the recording condition is stabilized. In particular, when a laser beam is to be irradiated to the recording layer, the temperature thereof locally increases during recording and reproduction. If the temperature is raised to a point more than the Curie temperature, the magnetization of the recording layer is reversed by the
